Built on a hillside, this ancient Cycladic fortress offers panoramic views of the entire island. The traditional architecture, the neoclassical mansions, the winding paths leading to the top of the village, the small white houses, the galleries, the vineyards and the churches make Pyrgos a magical place. Oia is located at the northwestern tip of the island and stretches for almost 2 km. From there all eyes are directed towards the nearby island of Thirasia and towards the centre of the Santorini caldera. The view is spectacular. Along its narrow streets, you will discover picturesque traditional houses. The bell towers, domes and mills pleasantly punctuate the landscape that is sublimated by the sunset. Fira, the capital of Santorini, is located in the center of the caldera. Its white houses decorated with the blue of the Cyclades seem to cling to the cliff. From the alleys of the city, the view of the caldera is grandiose and even dizzying as the edge of the wall is so close.
